British Airways, easyJet and Virgin Atlantic are changing terminals in January 2017.

If you are flying in or out of Gatwick Airport with one of these airlines this is what you need to know.
Airlines on the move

In January 2017 three airlines are changing terminals. All British Airways and Virgin Atlantic flights, along with some easyJet flights, will be moving, so if you are flying from Gatwick Airport on or after 24th January you might be departing from a different terminal than the one that you’re used to. Here’s what’s happening...

easyJet
- All flights will operate from the North Terminal

British Airways
- Will move from the North Terminal to the South Terminal
  - From 11 January BA 2272/3 New York (JFK) operates to/from South Terminal
  - From 19 January BA 2613/2 Naples (NAP) operates to/from South Terminal

Virgin Atlantic
- Will move from the South Terminal to the North Terminal

As always your airline will tell you whether you are departing from the North or South Terminal, but if for any reason you are unsure which terminal you need, check with the airline directly via their website, or visit www.gatwickairport.com/whichterminal

Getting between terminals

If you find yourself at the wrong terminal there’s no need to worry, it’s quick and easy to travel between the two using our free shuttle service. The shuttle is clearly signposted and takes just a couple of minutes to travel between the terminals. Always make sure you give yourself plenty of time at the airport, allowing at least the minimum time specified by the airline for check-in.

Why the airlines are changing terminals

Gatwick is growing fast and investing £2.5 billion to transform the airport. Relocating the airlines will improve your experience in the terminals, with newly created spaces and self-service technology at bag drop, security and immigration smoothing your journey through the airport.
Further information

You can find out more about what’s happening at www.gatwickairport.com/airlinemoves